In Safe Hands: Abu Bakar's Journey to Recovery

When Abu Bakar, the only child of Arbab and Shabana, suddenly developed a high fever accompanied by severe vomiting and diarrhea, his condition deteriorated rapidly. Pale, weak, and refusing to eat, his worried parents rushed him to ChildLife's Children's Emergency Room at Civil Hospital, Karachi, the first ChildLife ER, operational since 2011, which has provided free emergency care to over one million children.

On arrival, Abu Bakar was triaged as critical. The emergency team acted without delay. Physicians assessed his condition, initiated intravenous fluids, closely monitored his vital signs, and began treatment for gastroenteritis, jaundice, and fever.

Within hours, his vomiting subsided and his fever reduced. By the following day, the child who had arrived limp in his father's arms was sitting up, alert, and asking for water.

"The ER was clean, the staff were alert, and they didn't make us wait. In that moment, we knew our son was in safe hands," shared Arbab.

Abu Bakar's recovery is one of thousands of such stories witnessed every day at ChildLife, where compassionate, timely, and expert emergency care saves young lives across Pakistan.

Your support helps ensure that no child loses their life for lack of quality emergency care.
